Events

We hold an international conference in a different city every year.

We also host specialty conferences to promote conservation practices and highlight specific natural resource concerns.

The Journal

We publish the Journal of Soil and Water Conservation, a multidisciplinary journal of natural resource conservation research, practice, policy, and perspectives.

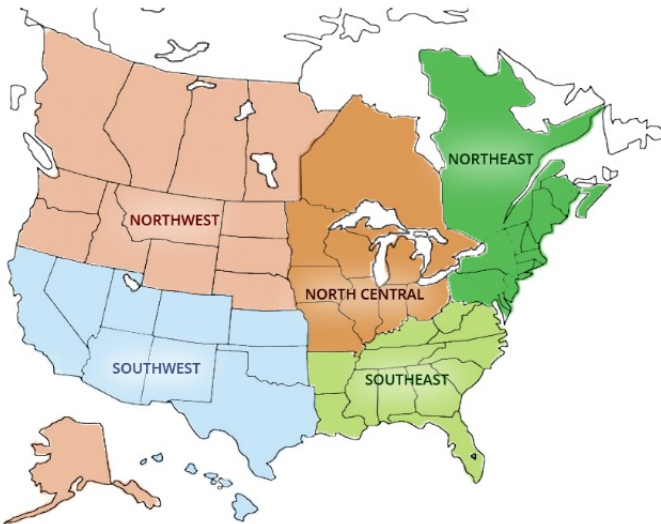

Specialty Projects

SWCS actively engages in policy conversations, on-the-ground projects, educational publications and professional development opportunities, and effective partnerships that support and inform conservation professionals and their work.

Local Chapters

SWCS is organized into five regions across the United States and Canada. Our chapters provide opportunities for education, training, and networking for our members at a local level.

Chapter Resources

Chapter leaders can find resources to engage their chapter and grow membership through the SWCS website:

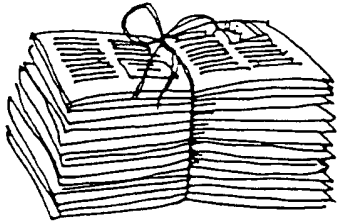

www.swcs.org/resources/chapter-leadership-tools/

These resources include webinars that highlight new tools from headquarters, discuss shared chapter challenges, and offer ideas for making your chapter effective in fostering the science and art of natural resources conservation.
